Republican Democracy and Confidence in Latin America: The Hope That Never Comes, Not Enough

Isabel Wences y Cecilia Güemes

Abstract. At a time of political disenchantment, can policies of open government, transparency and participation be used to combat social and institutional distrust in Latin America? To answer that, this paper reviews trust literature in order to outline the concept, demonstrate its importance to democracy and discuss ways of bringing it about. Second, it describes the most popular international initiatives to rebuild trust. Third, it tries to provide a normative framework for the implementation of measures while also addressing the challenges to our democracies by reclaiming the principles of democratic republicanism. We conclude with a word of caution towards the expectations that such projects generate.

Key words. Democracy, republicanism, trust, Latin America.

The Exigent Democracy. Pierre Rosanvallon’s Theory of Democracy

Rocío Annunziata

Abstract. This paper aims to explore what we could conceive as Pierre Rosanvallon’s theory of democracy, based on his most recent trilogy. We claim that his is a theory of the exigent democracy, which turns disenchantment in to a motor of transformation and redefinition. According to Rosanvallon, democracy is a political regime, is a way of government, is the citizen activity and is a form of society; and it is plural in each one of these dimensions. After reviewing the emergence of counter-democracy powers, the new figures of legitimacy and the need for reformulation of a society of equals, we address the risks of “the impolitic” and we argue why his perspective presents a theory of the exigent democracy.

Key words. Democracy, counter-democracy, legitimacy, equality, Pierre Rosanvallon.
DEMOCRACY AND FACTUAL DISAGREEMENTS: TO PROCESS OR TO REMOVE? AN APPROACH FROM THE INDEC EVENT

Andamios

AbstrAct. The facts and the factual disagreements play an important role in democracy. I discuss the situation in which democracy works manipulating facts. Later, I describe how this situation brings about a transformation in the ability to submit and process the factual disagreements.

BASIS FOR A PROGRAM OF EDUCATION OF THE EMOTIONS

Helena Modzelewski

AbstrAct. Contemporary research in psychology and neuroscience recognize the weight of emotions in the pursuit of our goals, in the development of our arguments and the quality of our social relationships. Philosophy and science no longer see reason as opposed to emotions; cooperation of emotions with cognition improves our practical rationality. Thus, the interest in the search for tools to educate our emotions becomes evident.

Based on psychological, neurological and philosophical research on emotions, this article presents, from the perspective of philosophy of education, certain crucial elements that allow for the implementation of emotional education: self-conscious reflection, narrative, and the methodology of community of enquiry, which includes the former elements.

Key words. Emotional education, emotions, self-conscious reflection, narrative, community of inquiry.

CONCEPTION OF RURAL EXTENSION IN 10 LATIN AMERICAN COUNTRIES

Fernando Landini

Abstract. There are different models to conceive rural extension. In order to describe the conceptions of rural extension supported by rural extensionists working in ten different Latin American countries, a survey was conducted. The sample was non-probabilistic, incidental (n=589). The conception of rural extension of the surveyed extensionists is mainly supported in the transfer of technology model, with important differences among the different samples. The Uruguayan sample features a dialogical model. In no sample appeared ideas related to local/territorial development or to innovation systems approach. Actions towards consciously and critically choosing the extension model to be implemented are recommended.
